POLICING THE PUNJAB.

DIFFICULTIES OF A SMALL FORCE.

A STRENUOUS YEAR.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

SILLA, Sept. 13.

The task of policing a province like the Punjab is not an easy one. The province is a hundred thousand square miles, and has a population of over twenty million people. It is a land of many races and many religions, and is naturally be a hard one. The difficulties are increased by the fact that the province is under a force only ten thousand strong, and that the officers of the Imperial Police Service, as well as the British Government, are well aware of the extent of the problem. The officers of the Punjab police have been working under great pressure, and have paid a strong tribute to the manner in which they have carried out their duties, and several lost their lives. The government has been working with the utmost efficiency against the worst attempts to undermine their work.

The Inspector-General can write that the police are doing their utmost to uphold the law and order in the province. He has directed the following telegram to the Prime Minister: "The mass of cases and difficulties in the Punjab are growing and the officers of the Punjab police are working under great pressure to maintain law and order. The government has been working with the utmost efficiency against the worst attempts to undermine their work." The telegram is signed "Inspector-General." The message was sent following the resolution to the Vice-President: "The report of the number of cases and difficulties in the Punjab is growing and the officers of the Punjab police are working under great pressure to maintain law and order. The government has been working with the utmost efficiency against the worst attempts to undermine their work."
